Didsbury experiencing a building boom

Building permit values for first six months in 2012 already breaks record for entire year

BY JOHNNIE BACHUSKY
 Review Staff

The good times are not only rolling again in Didsbury but the ride is even better.

The town is going through an unprecedented boom with building permit values for the half year in 2012. The six-month totals already exceed the previous record for an entire year.

For all of 2007, the total value of building permits achieved a record of $16,465,144. For the first six months of 2012, the total value of building permits is already at $18,607,400 – more than $2 million over the final tally of 2007.

The other two top years for development in Didsbury were 2006 and 2009. In 2006, the total value of building permits for the entire year was $14,387,885 while in 2009 the total for the year was $14,202,330.

"This is a very exciting time for the Town of Didsbury," said Roy Brown, the town's chief administrative officer. "To set a new building permit record this early in the year makes us extremely excited about the future."

"The town has been working with other businesses who think that now is the time to build in Didsbury and those new projects will add to this total. This is looking to be a banner year for building in Didsbury."

The town's record-breaking year is being fuelled by big projects, including the Bethany Care Centre, the Heritage Crossing condominium project and the shopping complex along Highway 582.

Angle Energy and town reach deal on water

Calgary company makes unique industry move to have exclusive use over lagoon water

BY JOHNNIE BACHUSKY
Review Staff

Calgary's Angle Energy has just entered into an exclusive agreement with the town to purchase water from the waste water storage lagoon for use in the company's controversial fracking operations in the area.

The company, which has several horizontal oil wells in the Didsbury area, will be paying the town tens of thousands of dollars, depending on the amount taken each year of the three-year agreement.

"This is something really different. I would be surprised if other (oil) companies don't look at this. I believe it makes us one step ahead," said Graham Cormack, Angle Energy's vice-president of operations, of the company's exclusive right within the oil industry to use Didsbury's water. He added the company and the town have been in discussions about the deal since last January, and that they were kept deliberately quiet due to the competitive nature of the oil and gas industry.

"It makes good business sense to do what we did," said Cormack, noting he is only aware of one other similar arrangement in the industry, a multi-million dollar agreement signed in 2010 between Shell Canada and the City of Dawson Creek in British Columbia.

"For us it is a win-win situation. This is not the cheapest source of water but it is better for the environment."

Cormack declined to discuss financial details of the agreement with the town but Mayor Brian Wittal said the deal calls for Angle to pay $50,000 for lagoon water up to 10,000 cubic metres, an additional $50,000 for water between 10,000 and 40,000 cubic metres, and another $50,000 for amounts more than 40,000 cubic metres. At the same time the agreement stipulates the town cannot enter into a similar agreement with any other company in the oil and gas industry.

Both sides agree that the deal to use the facility's effluent instead of fresh water in and around the fracking operations is a winning scenario for the environment.

"By creating this innovative arrangement, the town of Didsbury has taken another step towards becoming a leader in environmental sustainability," said Wittal, adding Angle has been using the lagoon effluent "sporadically" since early June. "By using treated water from the storage lagoon for fracturing purposes, Angle Energy reduces the amount of fresh water it draws from local water sources and the Town of Didsbury benefits by allowing the town's lagoon to receive more waste water without requiring more capacity."

The deal comes as the town moves forward with the upgrades to the lagoon system, which will ultimately cost more than $13 million to complete. The town was notified last year from the provincial government it would receive a $6.2 million grant from the Alberta Municipal Water/Wastewater Partnership. The town picks up the rest of the cost. Wittal said he expects upgrades to be completed within the next two to four years.

Revolution Festival planned for 2013

BY JOHNNIE BACHUSKY
Review Staff

An ambitious plan by a new Christian-based group to stage an inaugural outdoor music concert - Revolution Festival - in the Didsbury area in 2013 is strongly supported by the mayor but will not be held within town limits.

"We don't have the facilities. We are looking at the surrounding area," said

Mayor Brian Wittal.

Revolution Ministries, a new group of five members established earlier this year, is an umbrella organization aiming to create many activities, including concerts, retreats and camps, for citizens seeking a spiritual way of life based on the readings of the Bible and the teachings of Christ.

Josiah Cook, a Didsbury businessman and founder and director of the group, emphasized Revolution Ministries is not a church, nor even what is known as a non-denominational church. He said the group achieved non-profit status two months ago and is now seeking to be legally recognized as a charity.

"There are a number of different things we are going to do," said Cook.

He said group members are also in the process of applying for grants and loans to stage the event, which is tentatively scheduled for Aug. 22 to 25, 2013. Cook would not comment on how much his group is seeking in loans and grants, or how much the festival will cost.

"We believe there is a good possibility we can get 5,000 to 10,000 people to attend this event," said Cook.

"Based on our market research this is not just a shoot in the stars."

Heritage plans moving forward

Property owners will soon be able to apply for provincial funding help

BY JOHNNIE
BACHUSKY
Review Staff

Didsbury is set to become one of Alberta's prestigious heritage communities.

Town council approved a motion last week (June 26) to move forward with its formal application to the provincial government for matching grant funding to implement Didsbury's Heritage Management Plan (HMP) and the Alberta Main Street Program. Council's approval follows an exhaustive process since 2009 that saw the town complete its heritage survey and inventory.

"This is great. It sets the tone for council really taking heritage conservation seriously in this community and the tone for future heritage conservation projects," said Lesley Bannister, the town's community planning officer.

It is expected the town's applications will be approved by the province by March. Didsbury will then join a select group of three provincial communities, including Uptowne Olds, that are officially designated as Alberta Main Street communities.

"With the Alberta Main Street Program, it adds a potential $40,000 matching grant funding for economic development opportunities

There's much interest in Didsbury to protect historical buildings, like those in the downtown. Becoming an Alberta Main Street town will offer incentives to do just that.

in this community based on our heritage values," said Bannister. "I think we really have a unique historical downtown and a really unique community and it is about time we started showing people that."

The $40,000 from the Alberta Main Street Program is designed to be split four ways towards four different projects – marketing, design, organization and economic development. This will be determined by a body established by council, possibly a new downtown economic development committee, to oversee the program in the community.

Meanwhile, the HMP will look at establishing the designation process for the town's municipal historic resources, an essential requirement to access provincial grant funding from the Municipal Heritage Partnership (MHPP). The town's 25 business and residential heritage property owners in the downtown core will be eligible for 50 per cent matching funding up to $50,000 a year. The provincial government selects one application a year.

"If we are approved by the provincial government for matching funding three properties will be selected to be designated as part of the Heritage Management Plan," said Bannister. "We have some really passionate property owners. Hopefully, we will be able to let them know ahead of time which properties will be selected, and that will be up to the Heritage Advisory Committee to make those recommendations."

Before making its final vote, council was asked to consider whether it wanted to implement both plans at the same time, or wait a year for one or both. The earliest budget year that would see cost ramifications for the town would be 2013.

At the Committee of the Whole Meeting on June 12 council members were told if both plans were pursued separately the total cost to the town would be $35,000. If done together the cost would be $25,000 – saving the town $10,000.

As well, by doing both plans together the town will have two integrated plans with "clearly identified outcomes" for residents and defined roles and responsibilities for council, property owners, the town's Heritage Advisory Committee and administration, said a report to council members on June 12.

"We have a group of six passionate (heritage property) owners who have urgent infrastructure needs," said Bannister. "If we wait a year we run the risk of losing that momentum that is driving this."

Council opted on June 26 to implement both plans at the same time for the 2013 budget, which will save taxpayers $10,000.

Oil industry oversight must have teeth

As by far the biggest economic driver of the Alberta economy, the oil and gas industry is and will no doubt remain vital to the finances of virtually every village, town, county and city in this province.

DAN SINGLETON

Billions of dollars of royalties from oil and gas development pay for Alberta hospitals, schools, roads and highways, social programs and a myriad of other things. And make no mistake, without the cash generated by the petroleum industry, Alberta would go from being one of Canada's richest 'have' provinces to the poorhouse in a great big hurry.

As such the Redford government should do all it can to promote the industry, making sure oil and gas exploration and development continue for years to come.

Any Alberta government that did anything less than its utmost to make sure the province remains a welcome environment for oil and gas companies would be falling down on the job.

With that said, the same government must also do all it can to make sure the success of the oil and gas industry doesn't inadvertently result in environmental damage to the province's air, ground and water resources.

And as anyone who has seen the damage caused by the recent oil pipeline leak on the Red Deer River in West Central Alberta can attest, mishaps in the petroleum industry can sometimes lead to plenty of mess and great inconvenience for everyone.

While the Redford Tories say their regulatory system does a good job of helping prevent oil spills, opposition parties say the government is failing to properly and adequately oversee the petroleum industry, resulting, in turn, in preventable environmental damage.

"Conservative environmental protection has always been weak," NDP environment critic Rachel Notley said last week. "It's always been more about press releases and polished public relations campaigns than about actually getting boots on the ground, and regulations on the books."

"But when we see repeated failures on the part of pipeline companies, both the environment and industry sustainability are put at risk."

Notley is calling for a comprehensive and independent review of the regulatory oversight of Alberta's oil and gas pipeline system.

While it is wholly unlikely that the Redford government would follow the advice of the NDP on this or any other matter, the PCs must keep in mind that their job is twofold when it comes to the oil and gas industry: promote development and protect the environment.

Go ahead and champion Alberta's petroleum industry, Premier Redford, but for everyone's sake, also make sure it is clean and safe.

Opinion

Guest Editorial

Let's just play hockey

Hockey in Canada is probably as emotional a subject as can be found. It is our game, it runs through our veins as surely as does blood.

So it was no surprise when this week's controversy arose over the backyard rink being built by former Edmonton Oiler Fernando Pisani in Riverstone Pointe in Sturgeon County. When the Gazette posted its story and a picture of the rink under construction on its website Wednesday evening, it sparked a firestorm of hits and comments.

There were more than 9,000 hits on the Gazette website Thursday – more than double the normal. Supporters and opponents were debating the pros and cons on Twitter and the story was picked up by dozens of other websites, including some foreign language sites.

On a day when the sports world was full of major stories – from Steve Nash signing with the Los Angeles Lakers to Olympic sprint champion Usain Bolt withdrawing from his final race before the London Games due to injury – the backyard rink was among the most talked-about subjects.

There are a lot of legitimate arguments to be made by both sides in this disagreement.

The neighbours have a right to be concerned about the noise factor. Imagine a dozen or so kids banging pucks against boards, slapping sticks on the ice, yelling for passes and just generally being noisy kids. But then, isn't that as Canadian as it gets?

If this is used like most backyard rinks, the kids will be there right after school until they get called in, and that means the lights will be on from about 4 p.m. until past some people's bedtime.

And this is not your normal "backyard rink" where Dad goes out several times a day with the garden hose to build up an ice patch over the grass. And it melts in the spring and is gone.

This is a permanent facility with a concrete pad, boards, Plexiglas ends (where's the fun in that when the kids don't even have to stomp through snowbanks to find the pucks?) and three-metre-tall light standards.

This is not the type of backyard rink that Wayne Gretzky learned to play on.

So, yes, the neighbours have a point in saying the county should have looked into this more and required at least a permit. This is much more than a simple backyard shed or a deck.

On the other hand, this is about hockey and it is Canada.

We get adults whining and complaining about kids playing hockey on the streets.

We complain that the game is so structured now that kids hardly have a normal life because Mom or Dad have dreams of professionalism and million-dollar contracts.

And hockey doesn't allow the child to play other sports, even in the summertime.

So here is a Dad, admittedly a millionaire ex-hockey player, who wants to give his pre-teen kids a chance to skate and have fun with their friends in the safety of their own backyard. To learn the skills of the game, and God knows we certainly need more Canadians in the NHL playing with more skill and less brawn.

So, yes, the neighbours have a right to be concerned, but Pisani is doing what almost every Canadian dad would love to do. This is one disagreement that should be settled in the backyard, perhaps with a friendly beer, lots of conversation and a good old-fashioned game of shinny ... Fernando versus all comers.

To My Adoring Husband on our 5th Wedding Anniversary

My Dearest J.R.
 We have been together for five years, five years that have gone by so fast. When I first met you I knew that you were an incredible man, who's intelligent, compassionate, and amazing. I fell in love with you instantly and knew that you were the one. Not only have we had an incredible first five years together but also we were blessed with the births of our two beautiful daughters Jaden and Dylan. I'm so proud and honoured to be your wife and I couldn't imagine my life without you in it.
 Happy 5th Wedding Anniversary to the best husband a wife could even dream of having. May we have many more exciting years to come. I love you with all my heart.
Your Loving and Devoted Wife, Shannon
